In its four-plus decades, David Easton's namesake firm has translated Easton's wide-ranging architectural knowledge and his propensity for design into extraordinary residences for his clients. Easton's philosophy is that first the architecture of a room must be correct, and then comes decoration. Once known for his opulent English-style interiors, he has effortlessly shifted towards a streamlined aesthetic. Easton's clients are asking for clean, pared-down interiors filled with odd and unique antiques and he doesn't disappoint. For 2015, the firm is working on two houses in Aspen, an apartment in a high-rise in New York, a residence in Palm Beach, a residence in San Francisco, and a private jet plane.

Following 16 years at Parish-Hadley Associates, David Kleinberg launched his own full-service interior design firm in 1997. He says his mantra, "Beauty meets quality of life," guides every project. Known for clients who continue to come back to him time and time again, Kleinberg has a knack for calibrating each interior to the occupant's lifestyle. His striking sensibility is always modern and understated. He believes that in every residence there should be a unifying and "cohesive thread that starts at the front door and continues to the back hall." On the boards for 2015, an enviable project: a 90-plus-meter luxury yacht.

David Scott established his namesake firm in 1991. A master of the visually stimulating interior, he is known for creating special mood boxes—compositions of materials, textures, samples, and photographs of art—to give clients an overall impression of what's to come. Scott's highly functional spaces are the result of his ability to elegantly bond the past with the present, and to bring together fine art and antiques with sleek and contemporary pieces. Projects for 2015 include a hillside estate in Paradise Valley, AZ, a harbor-front contemporary vacation home in North Haven, CT, a Park Avenue apartment, an East Hampton contemporary glass house, a West Village apartment, and a new Miami Beach penthouse.
